Francisco Chacón Jiménez (ed.)

Changing Social Environments in Spain

This book presents several theoretical proposals about social and familial – but also political and cultural – change in Spain in the transition from the Ancien Régime to the modern age. The sociocultural reality of the Ancien Régime, based on inequality and privilege, is redefined through kinship and, both horizontal and vertical, social relations. In this way, the transition from the patriarchal to the conjugal family explains continuity and change in the context of new social relations that value individual merit, the accumulation of capital, and the decisive importance of feeling and emotion.

The Editor
Francisco Chacón Jiménez is Emeritus Professor of Early Modern History at the University of Murcia. He has carried out studies and research stays at different universities and higher research centers in Europe and Latin America. His areas of interest include social history, family history, and local history.
Francisco Chacón Jiménez (ed.)
Changing Social Environments in Spain

This book presents several theoretical proposals about social and familial – but also political and cultural – change in Spain in the transition from the Ancien Régime to the modern age. The sociocultural reality of the Ancien Régime, based on inequality and privilege, is redefined through kinship and, both horizontal and vertical, social relations. In this way, the transition from the patriarchal to the conjugal family explains continuity and change in the context of new social relations that value individual merit, the accumulation of capital, and the decisive importance of feeling and emotion.

The Editor
Francisco Chacón Jiménez is Emeritus Professor of Early Modern History at the University of Murcia. He has carried out studies and research stays at different universities and higher research centers in Europe and Latin America. His areas of interest include social history, family history, and local history.
Changing Social Environments in Spain
Changing Social Environments in Spain

Families, New Solidarities and Hierarchical Breakdown (16th-20th Centuries)
Table of contents

List of abbreviations ........................................................................................................... 7

Francisco Chacón Jiménez (University of Murcia)
Introduction. Families and social change. A new approach to Spanish history (circa mid-18th–circa mid-20th century) ................................................................. 9

José Pablo Blanco Carrasco (University of Extremadura)
Chapter 1. Primitive individualism. Family roots of early modern individualism in Spain .................................................................................................................. 77

Francisco García González (University of Castilla-La Mancha), Jesús Manuel González Beltrán (University of Cádiz)
Chapter 2. Families and social trajectories. Some research results from south-central Spain, 18th–19th centuries ........................................................................... 97

Máximo García Fernández (University of Valladolid), Juan Manuel Bartolomé Bartolomé (University of León)
Chapter 3. Appearances and family consumption in interior Castile (1500–1850) .................................................................................................................... 139

José María Imízcoz Beunza (University of Basque Country)
Chapter 4. The political and cultural class of Enlightened reformism. Avant-garde networks, reform, and resistance in 18th-century Spain .......... 177

Francisco Chacón Jiménez (University of Murcia), Juan Hernández Franco (University of Murcia), Antonio Irigoyen López (University of Murcia)
Chapter 5. Explaining social change through marriage, family, and kinship. Circa 1750–circa early 20th century ................................................................. 263